1146 LULLWATER ROAD NE

Helen & Donald O'Shea

Native azalea and perennials abound in this colorful informal garden through which the visitor strolls on a simple stone path. The owners, one of whom is a master gardener, have devoted themselves to creating a series of "rooms" that are pleasant to walk through and gaze at from the house. Tackling all of the transplanting, weeding, and pruning themselves, they have created gardens throughout the 500 x 100 foot property in stages since moving to the house in 1973. Keep an eye out for the white gardens, flame azalea, blood root, roses, and foxglove, as well as a monkey puzzle tree along the driveway.

Kathie & Charles Palmer

Built in 1929 by Coca-Cola founder Asa Candler as a wedding gift for his son John, this expansive home was Ivey and Crook's job number 215. Notable features include the impressively sized foyer with circular stair, paneled living room, and original library. The current homeowners, who purchased the house in 2005, undertook renovations and additions in 2011. Designed by noted Classicist architect Norman Askins, the extensive additions comprise a new kitchen, family room, mud room, back stair, and attic bedroom. The carriage and summer houses were constructed by the home's second owners who lived here between 1935 and 1980. Also set within this two-acre property are the original water well now used for irrigation and a chicken coop.

Set back from the street on a broad lawn, this 1923 Georgian Revival house was Ivey and Crook's job number 112. The house exemplifies Crook's interest in using regional precedent in the construction of local homes. Of particular interest is a framed set of original floor plans in the stairwell. Built for Morris Eiseman, who served as president of the Georgia Retail Clothiers and Furnisher Association, the home's second owners were Ralph and Alene Uhry. Their son, Alfred Uhry, is the famed playwright who authored "Driving Miss Daisy" and grew up in the house. Subsequent owners hired designer Vern Yip to undertake renovations of the master bath and kitchen while also adding a swimming pool. The current homeowners purchased the house in 2012 and subsequently added the carriage house. Take note of the collection of family made quilts, some of old Southern origin.

Niki Paris & Myron Kramer

A well designed townhome located in the Adair Estate, the Paris/Kramer residence encompasses three levels and 3,600 square feet. Contemporary furnishings blend with the traditional architectural design featuring extensive use of moldings and heart pine floors. A custom-made fireplace mantel, Venetian plaster walls, and a paneled library are among the special features. Tucked away off the top floor, a balcony overlooks neighborhood gardens and rooftops. The Adair Estate is an enclave of 15 single family homes, townhouses, and flats, developed in 2001 on property surrounding two early 20th century mansions. Set amidst mature planting, it is only just visible from the Olmsted Linear Park across the street.

RE/MAX METRO ATLANTA

960 OAKDALE ROAD NE

Erika & David Brookes

When the owners purchased this house in 2006, it was largely exposed to The Byway with the backyard as public as the front. Through creative landscaping efforts, the property has been re-envisioned as an outdoor oasis. This circa 1925 home has just undergone a complete renovation that encompasses many creative and custom features. The kitchen, designed in large part around the homeowners' vision, won the 2015 Atlanta Homes & Lifestyles Magazine Kitchen of the Year Award; with no upper cabinets, and surrounded by windows, its clean design is highly imaginative. The new family room and kitchen both open via balconies to a two-story lofted outdoor living space with fireplace and grilling nook. The owners' goal of merging indoors and outdoors has resulted in a home filled with light and beautiful views.

1451 NORTH DECATUR ROAD NE

Peggy & Henry Hibbert

This classical home, designed by Lewis Edmund Crook and built in 1924, was one of the architect's early jobs. Among the first homes built along North Decatur Road, it sits on an acre of land that is largely comprised of old growth forest. The formally designed exterior displays many examples of the detailing for which Crook is known, while a light and airy sense of easy living pervades the interior. Built for bachelor S. J. West, owner of the West Lumber Company, the house has always been well maintained, reflecting the fact that it has had only three owners. The current homeowners, who purchased the home in 1998, renovated the kitchen but pursued only light remodeling. Maintaining nearly all of its original features and character, and having been engineered by Crook's partner Ernest Ivey, the house remains as sound as ever.
